Does crude oil petroleum and drilling NRG lower the planet surface? Hopefully not, hopefully. While I am not a geologist I have analyzed using my own power of human reasoning - which should hold some weight because the planet is a big ball of dirt-rock that should react to liquids being extracted in some rather predictable ways such as lowering the Earth's mantle & reducing the distance between human society and earth's superheated core is not the best idea but a 1890's hand-me-down technology. To counter that effect plus pressure out every ounce of crude oil from earth's deep cavern subterranean underground much ocean water is used (equivalent to however many barrels of oil is extracted), pumped down as an oil-displacing fluid on the assumption earth's Water Cycle has plenty of water to spare us this planet-shrinking folly. But how would we know if the Earth's Climate is getting drier? One giveaway would be more fires which in fact 2008 has had many of in both California and Australia, not just in 2008 but in the last fireball of a decade. The easy way to fool the world's peoples this is not happening is to blame the fires on an "El Nino" effect. Fires? Oh, that's just the El Nino acting up (as if El Nino is an unruly teenage boy). This is just one of many semantic dodgeball tactics being used by petroleum industry to advertising blitz and inundate the radio-TV airwaves with. Why?! Are they too stupid to know what they are causing? No not at all. No industry that has sunk $2,000,000,000,000.00T in just the past decade into their business wants to die. They have every dollar invested in their winning the Energy Future battle Las Vegas pot... so they are committed to play the bad cards they have been dealt holding to the very end as any Kenny Rogers card shark might do. Understand though that until 1989 when I invented the system for getting half this country/nation's electrical energy supply from lightning towers the cards they held were the only cards around: fossil fuel/coal/crudeoil/gas. Their cards were great cards til I began inventing by God's Will to show the way awayfrom polluting fuels with God-honoring zero emission engines that produce absolutely No exhaust eliminating all EPA automobile emission standards: gone nada, leaving Americans to suck up a newly-violent climate now tearing and ripping our planet apart.

My engines have negated combustion engines.

And the world -with much less need for 97% everybody employed to have home+power+electric- would be a better place as well a lot less blatant slavery of wall-to-wall employees.

I await the arrival of Christ Jesus to free us from "necessary" greed.
